Nerthus. The reference list of Old English strong verbs

Preface

This reference list of strong verbs has been compiled as a guide to the analysis of word-formation, which very frequently takes the strong verb as starting point (Hinderling 1967; Seebold 1970; Kastovsky 1992; Heidermanns 1993; Martín Arista 2012, among others). The list comprises anomalous verbs as well as contracted and preterite-present verbs, which are attributed to the relevant strong class. The data have been retrieved from the standard dictionaries of Old English, including Bosworth-Toller's An Anglo-Saxon Dictionary (as well as Supplement and Addenda), Clark Hall's A Concise Dictionary of Anglo-Saxon (including Supplement) and Sweet's The Student's Dictionary of Anglo-Saxon. The classes of strong verbs are the seven distinguished by Campbell (1987) and Hogg and Fulk (2011), among others, while the subclasses are based on Krygier (1994). In general, the spelling follows Clark Hall and, less frequently, Sweet, with differences that require some comment. When it has been necessary to regularize, the spelling adopted reflects the West Saxon dialect of Old English, with the diphthong <ie> representing the i-umlaut of [ea] (breaking of Germanic [a]) as in bliebban 'to laugh'; Germanic [e] after palatal consonant as in giefan 'to give'; and the i-umlaut of [ea] after palatal consonant as in scieppan 'to create'. Another West Saxon feature found in the list that follows is the diphthongization of front vowels after palatal consonants as in scieran 'to cut'. When possible, late West Saxon forms have been avoided, in such a way that in the context of <g> followed by a front vowel in the same syllable the forms frignan 'to ask' and ābregdan 'to move' have been preferred over frīnan and ābrēdan respectively. Similarly, the convergence of the vowels between <w> and <r> is not favoured, thus āweorpan 'to throw away' rather than āwurpan.
